

Royal address in conjunction with Hari Raya Aidilfitri 1428: Gratitude a step to contentment

BANDAR SERI BEGAWAN, October 12 - Everyone, regardless rich or poor must be thankful. Furthermore, gratitude is a step towards contentment.

This was stated by His Majesty Sultan Haji Hassanah Bolkuah Mu'izzaddin Waddaulah, The Sultan and Yang Di-Pertuan of Brunei Darussalam in conjunction with Hari Raya Aidilfitri 1428.

His Majesty said that a rich person who is thankful is a happy person. A symbol and way of gratitude is by using his riches for good deeds, where among others that is asked is through zakat or tithe. He added, Allah has guaranteed more and protected possessions for those who give out tithe. In this context, the possessions given out as tithe are not diminishing but growing instead.

Meanwhile for those who are not rich, the way to be thankful is by possessing an attitude who is always satisfied with what had been bestowed by Allah. With this attitude, the person is the most grateful and the happiest.

His Majesty further said that what is vital here is our attitude. It is the attitude that determines the happiness or misery of a person.

The sovereign also talked on tithe where according to a statement by the relevant agency, the collection of tithe until August 31, 2007 had shown a decline.

"Why did it decline? Is it referring to a decline in the economy, or is it due to a change in our attitude in giving out tithe?"

"If it is really due to a change in the attitude, why did it change?," said His Majesty.

"To me, there must be a factor that caused the change, whether it is internal factors from within the society itself, or other factors. The internal factor, it may be caused by the society's confidence towards the tithe mechanism which is not yet stolid, which has become one of the causes for the tithe collection to be unsteady, or its visible fluctuation," said His Majesty.

"As an example, the statistics shown, in 2006, the Division of Tithe Collection and Distribution had collected only $8.8 million, compared to 2005 which collected $18.9 million, a large and obvious decline," said His Majesty.

The sovereign said that if this is caused by internal factor called confidence, we would be worried that it would be continued if it is ignored. Therefore he called for the proper agency to not only disclose facts and data but what is important is to overcome it with detailed studies on why there is a reduction on the collection of tithe.

This would give us useful information, and open ways towards tightening the methods of handling tithe, and thus handling the problem, said His Majesty.

At the end of his royal speech, His Majesty and the royal family wished all Muslim citizens and residents Selamat Hari Raya Aidilfitri.

NEW YORK, September 24 - Brunei Darussalam, like other countries are concerned with climate change. Royal speech on national Nuzul Al-Quran celebration

Al-Quran a map towards the path to excellence

BERAKAS, September 28 - The significance of Al-Quran as a map towards the path to excellence was highlighted at the recent national Nuzul Al-Quran celebration.

This was highlighted by His Majesty The Sultan and Yang Di-Pertuan of Brunei Darussalam where he also said that the important source of knowledge for the Islamic ummah is the Al-Quran. Excellence cannot be separated from Al-

Quran and it is the guide towards it.

"The path towards excellence, success and security needs a complete map. Al-Quran is the map meant. No serpentine exist inside. It is the light that illuminates all the paths," said His Majesty.

According to His Majesty, the Arabs during the pre-Islamic days were an uncivilised group. However, after they embraced the Islamic religion, their lifestyle changed and enabled them to build a glorious civilisation. This change is undoubtedly stimulated by Al-Quran.

"Therefore, when we want to achieve excellence today, Al-Quran is the correct path," said His Majesty.

The sovereign added that the Islamic ummah will not be able to achieve excellence if they leave their religious duties behind since excellence wholly comes from Allah The Almighty.

sometimes very confusing but, even so, we badly need our people to become involved in finding solutions and that is much easier said than done,

“To put it simply, our people do not know enough about the subject and they need to learn it very quickly indeed because it gives them knowledge and, from that, they developed understanding and then, in the end, everyone is involved,” said His Royal Highness.

SELAMAT DATANG
KE KAMPONG
SABA DARAT 'B'

KAMPONG SABA DARAT 'B'

Water Village or Kampong Ayer is synonymous with Brunei Darussalam where it was once the centre of administration. It was also the centre for commercial activities as well as it was the biggest housing settlement area for thousands of citizens and residents.

Daily activities for the folks of Kampong Ayer were mostly as fishermen, black and silversmith. While the women were left at home carrying out household chores and part-time activities such as weaving, plaiting and domestic food process and manufacturing like ikan masin (salted fish), prawn crackers and belacan (prawn paste).

Today, there are six mukims of Kampong Ayer, namely; Mukim Peramu, Mukim Saba, Mukim Tamoi, Mukim Burong Pingai Ayer, Mukim Sungai Kebun and Mukim Sungai Kedayan.

About 100 years ago, the people slowly began to move inland, along with the administration. In early 1990's, a series of mass fire destroyed some parts of the village and this further led more people to move.

Though faced with these kinds of threats, the Kampong Ayer is still standing proud. Each village has its own uniqueness with some known to be excellent cloth weaver to small-and-medium enterprises manufactures.

Hence for this edition, the editorial team decided to visit Kampong Saba Darat 'B', a village under Mukim Saba.

Mukim Saba comprise of five villages namely Kampong Saba Tengah, Saba Ujong, Saba Darat 'A', Saba Darat 'B' and Saba Laut. It acquires an area of 0.2462 km² with a population of less than 1,500 people (2005 estimate).

Kampong Saba 'B' is not exempted from receiving basic amenities such as supply of clean water, electricity, fixed land lines, prayer hall, schools and garbage collecting services.

The government through Brunei-Muara District Office also supplied the woods for making the 'titian' (jetty), said Awang Mayalin bin Haji Saat, the 37-year-old village head of Saba Darat 'A' and 'B' and Saba Laut.

"The government never neglect any needs of the population, even when the number of residents for the water village has reduced by about 40 per cent," said Awang Haji Saat, Awang Mayalin's father.

Awang Haji Saat who is 80 years old was the former village head of Saba Darat 'A' and 'B' and Saba Laut for 30 years.

Despite the fire rage, some people still prefer to live in Kampong Ayer and continue to carry their usual activities. The youth here also enjoy working out at the gym and playing Playstation games with their friends at their own-made centre.

"The youth here will conduct their own-activities particularly during the school holiday. The favourite is the 'labi-labi' competition. The competition usually attracts the participation from other villages too," said Awang Mayalin.

The competition (labi-labi) entails the rowing of a small boat and it is opened for children. For youth and elderly, the competition like casting the net is more popular.

To find ends meet, some of its population are working with the public and private sectors while some work on their own. Among the self-profession undertaken are boat-making and producing food products like prawn crackers, shrimp paste and traditional delicacies.

"The founder of 'Marimin' – the famous prawn crackers brand in Brunei originates from this village," said Awang Haji Saat.

Our trip to this village also brought us to one of the part-time producers of prawn crackers; Dayang Sanisah, a full-time housewife with three children.

According to her, she inherited the production of the prawn crackers from her family. All of her siblings are also actively involved in similar line of business but she revealed that her technique is slightly different from them.

"The main raw material is prawn and usually I obtained them from my husband who is a fisherman. If his catches are not enough, I will buy some from the wet market," said Dayang Sanisah.

The assembly line in the bid to produce prawn crackers starts with removing the prawn's shell. The raw prawns are then blended and mixed with salt, pepper, monosodium glutamate and added with water. Colour can also be added. The blended prawn will then be moulded with starch (flour) made into shape and kept to chill in refrigerator for overnight.

"The mould is chilled to make the cutting process easier," added Dayang Sanisah.

The next day, the chilled mould can be cut into desired pieces. Once cut, the prawn crackers are then put to dry under the sunlight. The drying period can take about two to three days depending on the weather.

Dayang Sanisah sells her prawn crackers at $5.00 per 300 gram. As she is only a part-timer producer, she only makes the crackers when there is request from customers. This also guarantees its freshness.

She received most orders during the fasting month of Ramadan as most people will be buying food stuff for celebrating Hari Raya Aidilfitri. Besides local customers, she also received orders from Singapore.

KITES

The kite is believed to be first popularised or invented in today's China nearly 3,000 years ago. Materials used were believed to be silk fabric for sail material, high-tensile-strength silk for flying line, and resilient bamboo for a strong, lightweight framework. The earliest known Chinese kites were flat (not bowed) and often rectangular.

Tailless kites were later used to incorporate a stabilising bowline. Kites were decorated with mythological motifs and legendary figures; some were fitted with strings and whistles to make musical sounds while flying. After its appearance in China, the kite migrated to Korea, Japan, Myanmar, India, Arabia, and North Africa, then further south into the Malay Peninsula, Indonesia, and the islands of Oceania as far as Easter Island. Since kites made of leaves have been flown in Malaya and the South Seas from the immemorial, the kite could also have been invented independently in that region.¹

Flying of kites has always been and still is a favourite pastime activity among Bruneians, especially among boys and men.

The locals refer to kites as kikik while the standard Malay language calls it layang-layang.

In the olden days, flying of kites was famous at the water village where it was often played from the pantaran (veranda) and titian (bridge connecting from one house to another). As time went by, with more people migrating to mainland, the flying of kites as a favourite pastime also shifted to the mainland.

The process of making a kite involved a buluh temiang (bamboo), paper, glue and thread. For making its frame, the bamboo is smoothened and designed to T-shape. The bamboo frame is tied with a string where a thin paper like grease or tracing paper is used to cover the frame. Thread is used as a string to fly the kite.

There are several names for kites

depending on the design. Among the well-known are pucuk rebung, serbang and pangkah. But nowadays, some youngsters like to put a famous logos or animation pictures such as Batman or Superman's logo to embellish their kites.

The flying of kites is made more exciting through a competition where the locals call it as bepulut kikik. This is when the owner of the kite has to fly his kite across his opponents and cut them.

This will led to the kite being detached from the string.

When the person is successful with his attempt to cut the string, the detached kite will be blown away where most of the time, the person and his friends will start to chase the kite. Some will bring a long bamboo or stick to hook the kite where those who successfully caught the kite will claim ownership to this kite. This added much excitement to the game.

Because of this competition, the usage of normal thread as a string is rarely used. To give a more competitive edge to the game, most kite owners did some modification to their threads by wrapping shattered glass to the string. To enable the shattered glass to stick to the string, tali tangsi (catgut) is used instead of thread.

There is a proper method to stick the shattered glasses that is by mixing it with glue or home-made glue so that it will easily stick to the string. The string will then be left under the sun for drying.

The famous home-made glue is made from ambuyat. Ambuyat is made when ambulong, an extract of Rumbia tree, is mixed with hot boiling water. Ambuyat is, however, one of Brunei's well-known traditional delicacies. The idea of making ambuyat as glue arise as ambuyat is sticky and cheap so it is used as an alternative for glue.

The process of making the string sharp requires hard work and must be done cautiously. Fingers might be accidentally cut because of the shattered glass or the glass will not stick to the thread if too much water is added to the ambulong.

Looking at this, more options are looked into as alternatives. Some time in early nineties, catgut which is originally sharp was used. There are few brands of this sharp catgut available in the market and only frequent kite players know which brand is good.

An interview with Awang Haji Muhammad Bagol, 62 years old, a government servant pensioner, revealed the new trend of kites flying activities. Now he is a part-time entrepreneur selling kites and catguts.

The business is quite good as people prefer to buy the kite than make their own. This is situation is similar with threads and catguts, said Awang Haji Muhammad Bagol.

When asked if the kites on sale were made by him, he replied that he is only a middleman. While the catguts he sold are imported from Indonesia.

"Time constraint and difficulty to find the raw material bamboo makes the people prefer to purchase instead of making their own," he added.

He further added that the trend of today's kite-flying is totally different. Before, kites flying are seasonal games where it is only played in selected months usually before the month of Ramadan (fasting month) and during school holiday.

But lately, people tend to turn it into a daily activity. Almost everyday, there will be people playing kites particularly after the office hours around 5.00 pm onwards.

Another new trend noticed is the kite players are mostly youth that is the working population whereas before, the activity was monopolised by children. The game, now is not only enjoyed by the Malays but also Chinese.

Referring to the place for kites flying, any beaches and open area is a preferable spot while at water village people will play from pantaran or titian. In Brunei, housing scheme areas is one of favourable spot for kites flying. Neighbours and friends who share the same interest usually play together.

But for about five to ten years back, relevant authority issued several advisories regarding the flying of kites. The kite-flying activity is no longer permitted to be played anywhere as there are few areas that are prohibited. A prohibited area includes common routes used by a helicopter and airplane.

Chasing a detached kite also raised concerns among motorist. During the olden time, chasing the kite did not imposed much danger as only fewer cars were present on the road. But now, where cars are almost everywhere, the activity is not advisable.

All these matters do concerned kites flying lovers but they did not take the advisory as threat to the game.

"The advisory is only to remind people to be more safety cautious. I do not think relevant authority will stop us from playing our traditional game," said one of the kites' players who is in his mid-thirties.

We also had several opportunities to ask few kites players why they chose this game compared to other traditional games.

They simply answered because the game only required low cost, as with BND$5 player can purchase a kite and catgut that can readily be played. This game can also be shared among family members.

"As many people have the same interest so it easy to find a place for flying the kites. You can just go to the area where you see many kites' players flocking. No entrance fees and memberships. If you are lucky, you can make new friends from various backgrounds," said one of the players.

Others answered playing the game is just for fun to relieve stress from daily work. Furthermore it is our traditional game so it our responsibility to sustain it.

Few steps also have been taken by relevant authority like Kites Association of Brunei to preserve this traditional game. Activity like kites flying competition is conducted once or twice a year usually in conjunction with His Majesty The Sultan and Yang Di-Pertuan of Brunei Darussalam's birthday celebration.

Some school also conduct activity like kites-making and kites-flying competition among their students.
